

Bad website of the week....

The award this week goes to Waverleygate, a site to promote the building at the end of Princes Street which is now home to Creative Scotland and NHS 24.

The former GPO building has been renovated over recent years and was completed in 2005. Since then its claim to fame seems to have been the lovely turquoise lighting which has illuminated the exterior. It offers over 36,000 square feet of office space, part of which is still vacant. The website will not do much to help that. An offer of looking at the plans was interesting – until you realise that the promised rollover feature does not work. Have a look at it here.

