

Architects opt for modern office

The Edinburgh office of Archial, one of the country's largest architectural practices and a member of the global Ingenium Group of companies, has today moved into the heart of the Capital.

Based previously at a five storey townhouse in Rothesay Place on the edge of the New Town, Archial has moved into new premises at 2 Multrees Walk on the corner of St Andrew Square.

✘ Cameron Walker, director at Archial, said: "This move consolidates our presence in the capital and will see some 20 professional and support staff move across the city. The modern, open-plan layout of our new 3000 sq ft studio provides a more conducive working environment for an architectural practice. Indeed, the move was made all the easier by the fact that the office was already fitted out as an architect's studio.

"The fantastic location of The Walk, together with its modern layout, makes our new office ideal for the next phase of Archial's development in Edinburgh."

Archial is an international architectural specialist with public and private-sector clients. Its diverse portfolio includes work in corporate, education, government, healthcare, industrial, mixed-use, residential, retail and transport sectors and it employs approximately 300 employees in offices throughout England and Scotland. The award winning Archial organisation is recognised for delivering intelligent solutions that combine creative excellence with commercial success.