

Five things you need to know today

✖ We would love one of our readers to crack this story! STV have reported on the wedding photos which appear to have gone missing in the post – for 40 years! If you know who it is then get in touch with STV – but do tell them you read it here....

Lesley McAra, Professor of Penology, has been announced as the next Head of School at Edinburgh Law School. Professor McAra takes over from Professor Douglas Brodie, who leaves to take up the position of Head of Arts and Humanities at Stirling University. Professor McAra will assume the post on 1st May 2011.

An established Edinburgh manufacturing company, Nairns Oatcakes, has reported a small increase in turnover but a small decrease in operating profits due to increased investment in marketing and the development of new products, including a gluten-free range. What is exciting though, is that they have expanded their workforce. They have a lovely website which is really worth a look – we love the tractor....

Mike Pringle MSP tells us about the new business parking permits which are about to be trialled across the city and which will be extended to non-liveried vehicles too.

And The Scotsman inform us that some opposition councillors may not approve the appointment of Chris Walton to head up Lothian Buses on the basis that he would be based in London.... What do you think of that? Do you have to live and work in the same city these days, or does the computer and technology free workers from that geographical bind?
