

Five things you need to know today

☒ The digital TV switchover takes place today and some homes will be able to get Freeview from now on. There is more information on the council website.

The council leader, Jenny Dawe has produced her leader's report which will be submitted to the council meeting tomorrow morning. You can download a copy here.

Edinburgh blog Suitably Despairing has a lovely photo of Torness along with a post about the German government's decision to cease using nuclear power.

The City's Libraries blog Tales of One City tell us that James Robertson will be speaking at Macdonald Road library on 16 June.

Our new guide to what is on in Edinburgh – totally eclectic and definitely not trying to be the all-encompassing tome that is The List – is being published today. We will continue to update this month's guide with any events that you draw our attention to...as long as they are in the future!

And our next guide will be published on Friday for this weekend, and then each Friday and then the new July guide on 1 July. So if you know of an event then please tell us and we can include it!
