Edinburgh IT company launches support division

Ladarnas, one of Edinburgh's most successful IT companies, has launched a new, dedicated IT support division, Rebooted.

Ladarnas, which was established in 2007, has increased turnover by more than 40% in the last year and has also doubled its client base in the same period. The company has grown to employ six full time staff, as well as a number of freelancers and associates.

Rebooted has been launched to specialise in offering 'managed' support services to small to medium sized businesses in Edinburgh, Glasgow and across other parts of central Scotland.

Rebooted will offer a 'health-check' service, to test, measure and ensure that clients' systems are the best fit for the requirements of their business. This includes a systems check, security review, policy advice and a full report, with individual recommendations.

Rebooted will also focus on keeping clients' IT systems up to date and secure, by monitoring networks around the clock, detecting and eliminating potential problems before they can affect systems.

Managing director, Neil Ballantyne said: "Our belief is that, as with most things, prevention is far better than cure. Our systems predict and prevent IT problems, which can save our clients time and money."

He added: "Rebooted will bring the benefits of a 'corporate' IT service to small businesses. We're anticipating a number of enquiries and expect demand to be high."
