

Five things you need to know today

Despite the rainy weather which has dogged so much of the Festival period, last night was dry for the Virgin Money Festival Fireworks. We have our photos over here, and would urge you to send your best ones to our Edinburgh Reporter Flickr pool. One of our photographers was in the Ross Bandstand and we will show you his photographs later. We are off this morning to see the Jungle City animals being unleashed around town before the big charity auction at the end of the month.

Edinburgh University is in talks about proposed fees for students from outwith Scotland according to The Herald, and an announcement is due today.

Edinburgh stunt cyclist Danny McAskill has produced a new film on YouTube which has been viewed almost two and a half million times already in just a few weeks. Here it is for you to enjoy...

We are interested to have a look at Leith Academy's website which has a lot of news on it. We would be interested to hear from you about your school's website. We may feature it here. Tell us where to find it!

Work on the Edinburgh Tram Project is due to start again today according to some sources. If you see any sign of work will you let us know? Better still send us photographs! theedinburghreporter@gmail.com