

The Machine Room – Camino de Soda Review

The Machine Room – Camino de Soda

Winter in Scotland is never a pretty affair. That is unless you've been listening to The Machine Room's new single.

With hooks to kill and vocals that could warm the coldest of December nights, the Edinburgh based five-piece have created a truly engaging track. Already creating quite the buzz on the city's music scene, the band have made something to rightly get excited about.

Pieced together by former-Vivians bassist, John Bryden, the boys have already received national radio play and firmly outgrown their 'Art School' roots.

Kicking off with an unexpected intro, the rhythm section and soaring synths build a cinematic base of euphoria. Bryden's tranquil vocals sit perfectly on top of these foundations, creating an eerie masterpiece that sounds part New Order, part Electronic and wholly outstanding.

It might still rain and snow but winter will seem a happier place with 'Camino de Soda' in it.

Camino de Soda is released on 5th December as a download-only single.

The single launch party is at The Wee Red Bar, Edinburgh College Of Art on 9th December (Doors @ 19:00)

Listen to 'Camino de Soda' now! (or else...)

Camino de Soda – The Machine Room by PauseRecord