

Fringe competition for reviewers

Allen Wright Award 2012

The Edinburgh Festival Fringe Society has opened submissions for this year's Allen Wright Award. This award was established fourteen years ago to encourage and reward quality writing in arts journalism.

The Edinburgh Festival Fringe Society set it up in 1998 as a tribute to Allen Wright, the Arts Editor of The Scotsman for thirty years. Allen Wright was a passionate supporter of the Fringe and a great encourager of young talent. The Fringe First Awards, which he founded, are to this day a major institution and point of highest prestige for its recipients.

This is the only official award handed out by the Fringe Society and honours his ideals and continues his contribution to the festival he loved.

There are two categories of awards – the first category covers reviews of shows that are part of the 2012 Fringe and the second category covers news stories, interviews and feature pieces linked to this year's Fringe.

Entrants for the award must be aged thirty or younger, and can submit up to two pieces of published work (minimum 100 words, maximum 2,000 words) relating to this year's Fringe in each category.

Entrants are free to choose whether to enter both categories or just to focus on one.

Submissions will be accepted up to 12.00pm on Wednesday 22nd August.

All entries should be accompanied by the official entry form.

Please submit all entries to the reception desk at the Fringe Media Office in Fringe Central, 11 Crichton Street.
