

Assault on woman in city centre

✖ Lothian and Borders Police are appealing for witnesses after a woman was assaulted in the Capital over the weekend.

The 23-year-old had been out with friends in Fredrick Street on Saturday evening and was walking along St Vincent Street at around 2.40am on Sunday morning as she made her way home.

At this time a man approached her from behind, grabbed her and forced her to the ground.

A struggle ensued, during which time the victim began to scream loudly. The suspect then made off along North East Circus Place towards Stockbridge.

Two members of the public then came to the woman's aid and she returned home before contacting police.

Officers believe this incident was sexually motivated and are investigating whether it could be linked to a similar incident, which happened in Cumberland Street in the early hours of Saturday 29th September.

There is currently no description of the suspect available.

Anyone who was in the area and remembers seeing anything suspicious is asked to come forward.

Chief Inspector Gavin Phillip said: "This was a terrifying ordeal for the young woman to endure and fortunately she was not seriously injured as a result.

"Her screams would have undoubtedly been heard by local residents, who may have information that can assist with our enquiries.

“Similarly, people making their way home at the time may have seen the woman as she walked home, or noticed her attacker in the area prior to the assault.

“As part of our enquiries, we are reviewing the circumstances of a similar incident in Cumberland Street at the end of September.

“High-visibility police patrols will be out in the area to engage with members of the public and offer local reassurance to the community.

“Anyone with information relating to either of these assaults should contact police immediately.”
