

Five things you need to know today

Edinburgh fire – two charged – Edinburgh University on film – The Royal Society talk – Wiff Waff Romance – Tonight at the Cameo – Half term suggestion

UPDATED 08:26

Lothian and Borders Police have reported that two boys, aged 15 and 13 years, have been charged with culpable and reckless conduct in relation to the fire at Stanley Place, Edinburgh on Monday .

A report will be submitted to the Children's Reporter in relation to this.

A series of over 400 minute long videos is being produced by lecturers at the University of Edinburgh to showcase both themselves and their work in various fields. You can watch them here.

Next month, on 19 March 2013, The Royal Society of Edinburgh are hosting a talk about Dr Livingstone. Dr Michael Barrett will talk about his scientific and geographic discoveries and the impact of tropical diseases on the doctor's travels in Africa. Tickets are free but you should book now. More details here.

If you did not get a Valentine card today or if you could not care too much about the romantic significance of the day then maybe you should go to the Out of the Blue Drill Hall this evening for Wiff Waff Womance the Alternative Valentines night. Details on Greener Leith Social.

All the usual ping-pong shenanigans – table tennis, eclectic music and beer – come with or without a partner – you may even meet your match!

And your final Valentine's suggestion for this year...Tonight at the Cameo they are showing Breakfast at Tiffany's at 9:00pm. More details on booking here.

You might be a little late to book your little darlings on the holiday camps on offer, but otherwise Edinburgh Leisure offer many locations to take them along and tire them out. More details here.

(Yes before you email us we know there are six things here but we have added in the news about the London Road fire)