

A rainy day at the Botanics

The Royal Botanic Garden Edinburgh was pretty empty today. It was rainy and cold but we braved it out to bring you some photos.

Unfortunately the rain seems to be spoiling the rhododendrons in the garden although when we met David Knott, Curator of the Living Collection recently he admitted the rainfall last year had helped bed in some of their new trees, planted to replace those lost in the January 2012 storm. We will have a video interview with David very soon.
