

Five things you need to know today

Edinburgh's Worst Drivers – Assembly Street plans – Your garden sheds – Avalanche sale begins today – Stockbridge Market

Our friend at Edinburgh's Worst Drivers (he is anonymous) has already taken a couple of photos this year of people who are driving or parking badly on Edinburgh streets or in supermarket car parks. If you haven't had a look at his Facebook page yet then amuse yourself this morning by taking a look here. And if you see any examples around the city then you can send him your photos.

Greener Leith highlight a planning consultation relating to what they describe as an 'awkward, abandoned and decaying site' in Assembly Street where developers hope to build 25 flats with cycle storage and two City Car Club spaces. Read more here.

What does your garden shed look like? What do you use it for, if not for storing your gardening equipment? Why not share it with us!

Add your photos, stories or videos here.

We were in Ocean Terminal yesterday remarking on how busy it was and how many shops there were when we came across the HMV store which is offering a further 10% off much of its stock as it is now closing down. The Scotsman is able to explain why here.

Meanwhile in the Grassmarket today the great sale starts at Avalanche Records. Some CDs have been marked down to 30p each!

More details here.

Stockbridge Market is open again today for all your culinary delights and hot coffee! Open from 10:00 till 5:00. More details here.