

RBS HQ to remain in Edinburgh

This is the statement that RBS have put out today after the result of the Scottish Independence Referendum was made known:

The announcement we made about moving our registered head office to England was part of a contingency plan to ensure certainty and stability for our customers, staff and shareholders should there be a 'Yes' vote. That contingency plan is no longer required. Following the result it is business as usual for all our customers across the UK and RBS.
