Hearts stars Kevin McHattie and Osman Sow took time out from their rehabilitation from injury to help serve up Christmas dinners for a homeless charity in Edinburgh last Monday.

Defender McHattie and striker Sow visited Streetwork in Holyrood Road, a charity who connect with homeless people, working to help enable them to bring safety and stability to their lives.

Hearts have built a strong reputation as a club with a proud record of community involvement and is keen to continue to build on its reputation as a positive social force in the community by working in partnership with many different local groups and charities.

A club spokesman told the Edinburgh Reporter that, despite their respective injuries, McHattie and Sow were only too keen to help to contribute to Streetwork's valuable work.

The two Hearts players are pictured at Streetwork's Holyrood base.
