

Legal move for employment lawyers

✖ Employment law, Health & Safety and HR specialists Law At Work (LAW) have recently moved to bigger offices in central Edinburgh to accommodate future expansion plans and an increased headcount.

The firm, which was a recent finalist for the 2015 Client Service Award from the Edinburgh Chamber of Commerce, will now be able to accommodate meetings and training events in their new home at 19 Thistle Street.

The LAW team, including Employment Law, Health & Safety and HR will be spread across the building's three floors, which has views overlooking the Firth of Forth and Fife.

Given steady growth in client numbers, LAW is also expanding its workforce, recruiting two new members of staff to support their 250 retained accounts across the UK.

Commenting on the move, Jane Wright, chief executive of LAW said: "We have been looking for a bigger office in Edinburgh for a while and Thistle Street is the perfect spot. Its central location makes it easy for clients to pop in, and it's quite a unique building which reflects our culture.

"The new space will enable us to simultaneously accommodate training events, meetings and consultations within a single hub. We can enjoy some more relaxed social time with our visiting or East Coast based clients, in the same way that Kintyre House in Glasgow provides for the West Coast."
