

Edinburgh Napier open new broadcast facilities

✖ Edinburgh Napier University today unveiled the cutting-edge digital newsroom which will ensure its journalism students hit the ground running when they enter the working world.

TV presenter Lorraine Kelly officially opened the new industry standard broadcasting facilities which will keep the University's teaching bang up to date amid a fast changing media landscape.

Lorraine's daughter, Rosie Smith is studying journalism at the university and joined her for a photo call along with fellow student, Finlay Matheson.

Edinburgh Napier – which has been training journalists since 1964 – runs broadcast news days throughout the year in which teams of students film, edit and produce TV and radio bulletins in real time, honing their skills in news delivery across multiple platforms.
