

Fresh appeal to help trace missing man Graham O'Malley

Police have released new images of missing man Graham O'Malley as they issue a fresh appeal for information as to his whereabouts.

The 29-year-old was last seen leaving a relative's home in Wolseley Terrace at around 11.20 a.m. on Saturday 6th August but has not made contact with anyone since this time.

Officers have been conducting inquiries throughout the city to trace Graham but have so far been unable to locate him.

Anyone with information that they believe can assist officers with this investigation is asked to come forward.

Graham is described as white, 5ft 10ins tall with a shaved head a fair skin that was slightly tanned.

He was last seen wearing a black leather bomber jacket, jeans, brown high top trainers and a grey woollen hat.

Graham also has a celtic band tattoo on one of his upper arms and is known to wear glasses and contact lenses.

Inspector Scott Casey from Craigmillar Police Station said: "It's now been over a week since Graham was last seen or heard from and this obviously raises our level of concern for his wellbeing.

"Graham is known to travel and we've been carrying out inquiries to establish if he may have ventured outside the city, but at this moment in time there is no information as to where he may be.

"We have now issued new images of Graham and would ask the public to contact us immediately if they recognise him, or believe they may have seen him since Saturday 6th August.

"I would also once again ask Graham to come forward if he sees this appeal and let us know that he is safe."
