

Fresh appeal for information following the death of Saima Ahmed

Police investigating the death of a London woman Saima Ahmed who was found at Gogarstone Golf Club on January 9 last year have issued a fresh appeal for information.

Ms Ahmed's body was found at Gogarstone Golf Club almost five months after she went missing from her Wembley home.

Officers have not established any suspicious circumstances.

Detectives believe she travelled by train to Edinburgh on August 30 last year although she has no known links to Edinburgh and her family were unable to explain why she would have travelled to the capital.

Detective Chief Inspector Martin MacLean said: "I am determined to provide Saima's family with the answers they crave and whilst at this time I have no evidence of any criminality, I still do not know why Saima travelled to Edinburgh, where she was intending to visit or whom she planned to meet with.

"I thank those who have helped us thus far, but I believe someone out there will have seen Saima during her time in the city, or knows why she visited the Capital and I would ask that person, or persons, to contact police immediately.

"In addition, anyone with any further information at all relevant to this ongoing investigation is also asked to get in touch."
