

An Edinburgh return for The Pigeon Detectives

In 2002, the Pigeon Detectives led by Matt Bowman broke onto the British music scene with their first record Wait for Me, a young and exuberant sound to match their youthful outlook on life.

They remained a mainstay on the British festival scene as they toured promoting their previous four albums. Now The Pigeon Detectives return to Edinburgh on their newest tour, promoting their latest studio album Broken Glances to be launched on February 24th.

As with previous albums, the Pigeon Detectives will be promoting their latest work as they hit the road again playing across the UK, with a stop here in Edinburgh on 4 March 2017 at Electric Circus

The new album is described by lead singer Matt Bowman as a much more personal and grown-up album which documents where they have been. While their earlier collections focused on pleasing the audience by giving them lyrics that they could scream along to, the new work explores emotions both high and low as the band take you on a rollercoaster ride.

The Pigeon Detectives tour begins in Dublin on 2 March and ends with a homecoming gig in Leeds at the end of April.

Tickets for Electric Circus are available here. The album Broken Glances is available online and at all good music stores from 24 February 2017.
