

East Lothian fun weekend will be bigger than ever

The Foxlake Outdoor Festival returns bigger and better in May with a weekend offering adventure for all the family.

The first festival sold out weeks in advance last year and the organisers in partnership with East Lothian Council have decided to extend it to a full weekend on 20 and 21 May.

Tickets start at £17 for an adult day entry and £30 for a weekend ticket and children are free.

Some of the most talented wake boarders from around the world will compete and the Decades Music Stage featuring tribute bands, celebrating the last 60 years of music is also back.

East Lothian's finest local musicians will be featured and joining them will be the Comedy Stage with a selection of Britain's finest comedians.

A Kids' Zone will feature an inflatable village filled and they can also enjoy a climbing wall.

Entrants can try the UK's only rope course constructed over water or don wet suits and try wakeboarding. They can even hop on a segway.

Councillor John McMillan, East Lothian Council's spokesperson for Economic Development and Tourism said: "The festival is not only committed to enjoying and celebrating our fabulous landscape but we also want to protect it.

"So, there will be a shuttle bus service from Dunbar Station throughout the weekend, giving the opportunity for all of our visitors to use the excellent rail links from Edinburgh and the North of England and leave the car at home.”
