

Pedro Caixinha insists Rangers' previous meetings with Hibs will have no bearing on today's game

Rangers' manager Pedro Caixinha insists Rangers' previous meetings with Hibs will have no bearing on today's Premiership clash at Ibrox.

It's the first time the two will have played since the Scottish Cup final of 2016 and both teams go into the game having won their last two fixtures in the league and Betfred Cup.

Caixinha was in the Easter Road director's box last weekend and was impressed with what he saw.

Speaking at Thursday's media conference, he said: "Football is one moment and no two games are the same. The contest is going to be different, so we just want to focus on the three points which we want to take – that is all.

"I know that we are going to face a great club, a great manager and a great group of players. But, besides that, we know how they play and what they want from the game regarding to the analysis we did based on their last few games.

"We know this game is sold-out and we are going to have the support from our fans. That is all we care about – that and conquering the three points for them.

"I don't think [there will be an extra edge]. It's not my concern to be concerned about it – it's just my concern to prepare the team and make them ready to have a strong start on Saturday.”
