

Read a newspaper with your coffee

Musti Egilmez who owns the Canongate Café changed his whole life by coming to Edinburgh from Istanbul 24 years ago. After a career with Standard Life and the Bank of New York he felt it was time for another change, and so he became a barista.

Musti Egilmez takes a moment to read the April edition of The Edinburgh Reporter – ask him for a paper with your latté!

He and his wife, Donna, own Mudo Art in Waverley Arches, but branched out onto the Royal Mile last summer.

Initially they wanted a small café but found the perfect location in the police box. They opened just before the festival, and although they have had coffee from the outset, this summer they will also sell ice cream.

Musti said he is pleased with the change but remarked : “It would be good if we could have this street closed to traffic just like they do in George Street during the festival.”

Musti stocks The Edinburgh Reporter so you can pick up a copy of our paper with your coffee.