

Charity find a new home

Edinburgh charity Comas has found itself a new home on The Pleasance which it can now move into when they have to vacate their premises at Jackson's Entry at the end of June.

The charity will lease the premises at 188-192 The Pleasance from The City of Edinburgh Council following a bid made on the open market against other competition. The council has decided that Comas is the best commercial proposal and they have accepted the offer from them.

Fiona Morrison the charity's Chief Executive says she is really pleased. "Myself, my team, our volunteers and community members are absolutely delighted and we look forward to a new start in our new premises. Thank you to everyone for their fantastic support in getting us here.
