

Next generation of Europe's star female footballers coming to Scotland

The next generation of Europe's star female footballers will be coming to Scotland this October, as the Scotland Women's Under-19s step up their preparations for next year's UEFA Women's Under-19 Championship with a tournament in their own backyard.

Spain, European champions at under-19 level in 2018, will join France and Denmark in travelling to Scotland for the event, which kicks off on Wednesday, 3 October.

The tournament will act as invaluable preparation for Scotland's Under-19s as they look towards next year's UEFA European Championships – a tournament for which they qualify automatically as the host nation.
