

Variety is key to deciding where to go for a pint

One of the pubs involved in the Autumn Beer Showcase

A survey reveals that 60 per cent of potential pub goers see variety and an exciting range of beers as key considerations when it comes to deciding where to go for a pint.

The results come as Nicholson's Pubs launch of their third annual Autumn Beer Showcase, a month-long event championing all things beer.

It runs until 4 November and allows discerning drinkers a chance to try some of Britain's best brews with over 40 special ales and craft beers on offer.

Brewers set to feature include WooHa, Siren, Ilkley, Fyne and London Brewing Co and Meet the Brewer' events and tasting evenings will be held.

Fyne will be holding tastings of their Maverick and Hurricane Jack beers along with an exclusive Meet the Brewer event at Edinburgh's Rose Street Brewery on 17 October.

There are eight Nicholson's pubs across Edinburgh involved and they are Conan Doyle, Deacon Brodies Tavern, Greyfriars Bobby, Haymarket, Kenilworth, Last Drop, Mitre Bar and Rose Street Brewery.
