

Hibs sell over 12,000 season tickets for forthcoming campaign

Hibs have sold over 12,000 season tickets for the forthcoming campaign and they have already invested much of the proceeds on new players such as Christian Doidge, Tom James, Joe Newell, Adam Jackson and Scott Allan.

Last season the club had the third largest home attendances in the country and they are on course to repeat that this year.

A statement on the club website reads: "We are delighted to report that season ticket sales for season 2019/20 have broken through the 12,000 milestone. On Tuesday Christian Doidge became our fourth signing of a productive summer so far, with progress being made on a few other new faces.

Our new number nine cost a significant six-figure sum and that kind of investment is only possible thanks to the backing you continue to give us.

“We hope you’re as excited ahead of the new season as we are, with Paul Heckingbottom and Robbie Stockdale looking to build on their promising start to life in the Easter Road dugout. The tried-and-tested stalwarts who have served this club with distinction for the last few years will be back – mixed with hand-picked recruits – and we are all hungry to improve on last season’s efforts.

“Last season we broke our record for the number of season tickets sold and it’s a source of pride to have had the largest average home attendance outside of Celtic and Rangers in Scotland. We want to build on that and make sure our home is packed out on a regular basis.”
