

Art Walk Party continues during the winter

'THE DECORATORS' – Nicky Bird Residency until February 2020

This residency focuses on a group of women who worked as decorators for Buchan & Co potteries in the late 1960s.

Most of the women were in their teens and they painted thistles, among other motifs, in workshops near the present-day site of the kilns in Portobello.

Each decorator would have her own mark that she would put at the bottom of any pottery she decorated. In 1972, Buchan & Co closed the Portobello site and moved to Crieff. Some of the women ceased to be decorators at around this point, either through redundancy or moving onto to married life. Two kilns are the only physical traces of the pottery with a housing estate now on the site of the workshops.

A visit to the present-day site makes it hard to locate where the workshops once were and so the women's work remains invisible.

The Decorators residency directly collaborates with a number of these women. The residency consists of viewing their photographs, interviews, site visits, and locating relevant archive material. By paying attention to voice, image, pattern on pottery including the marker on its base, the residency will produce a series of events and site-specific related artwork that tease out the significance of stories of the decorators, and how in their own subtle way, they continue to leave a mark on the Portobello landscape.
