

Edinburgh International Festival 2020 – lunchtime sessions

Although none of the international musicians who we have come to expect, are actually arriving in Edinburgh this August, their music goes on.

There are chamber music soundscapes in Princes Street Gardens each lunchtime from Monday to Friday until 28 August, and some of these concerts will feature on Classic FM individually, and in a highlight concert with John Suchet on 31 August 2020.

The Edinburgh International Festival opened the doors of its home, The Hub on Castlehill, to record a series of unique specially filmed performances with nobody there except essential technical staff and the performers.

While it is still impossible to have an audience present for these recitals, they are available on the EIF YouTube channel, with new performances every Monday to Friday for three weeks this August. At a time when Edinburgh would ordinarily come alive with music, these exquisite sounds will be relayed to speakers scattered across Princes Street Gardens, livening up lunchtime for listeners.

Highlights from the concert series will be broadcast on Classic FM in a special edition of The Classic FM Concert with John Suchet and streamed on the station's Facebook page. Classic FM is both the UK's most popular classical music station and has the highest Facebook following in UK radio.

Anyone in Princes Street Gardens is reminded to adhere to the Scottish Government's social distancing guidelines.

While you may experience this in the gardens themselves, you don't have to as these are also available on the EIF YouTube channel here.

Each 40-minute specially recorded chamber music performance will be audible throughout the gardens, allowing socially distanced audiences to enjoy the music whilst having a picnic or taking a walk.

The festival's director, Fergus Linehan, said: "For the first time since lockdown, orchestras, ballet companies, traditional musicians, theatre ensembles and designers have come together to perform in and light up the venues they love.

"This has been achieved with great care to ensure the safety of all involved. It represents a cautious but essential step towards the re-emergence of the performing arts in our country."

He added: "The programme of events that we have announced is not so much a curated season as a reunion – it is time for our artists to make theatre together, to play music together, to sing together, to dance together and to light up the skies together."
