

Melting Pot will unveil its new home live tonight

Until recently the co-working space The Melting Pot had a base in Rose Street. Now they have a much bigger home which they will reveal on Monday night on social media.

Organisers are encouraging people to register for the event on their facebook page so that they can be amongst the first to see their exciting new space.

The co-working space is home to charities, individuals, social businesses and freelancers and there is already a waiting list set up to manage the enquiries from those who want to work somewhere else other than home.

Claire Carpenter CEO of The Melting Pot

The Melting Pot's Founder and CEO Claire Carpenter said, "Working from home has had a detrimental impact on many people's health and well-being, as well as their work.

"After months of hard work, we are both proud and excited to be unveiling our new location tonight. We believe it will be the perfect place for those who are wanting to reap the many health and wellbeing benefits that come from getting out of the house and working safely amongst others. Not only that, but we know that working together in the same space can help increase productivity, improve motivation levels and help to generate new creative ideas.

“We are planning on opening the new space in May with all comprehensive measures in place to keep us safe as we connect in our community’s new home.

“I’d encourage anyone who is keen to learn more about coworking spaces to join us at our online event tonight. You’ll get to virtually look around and get a feel for the many benefits that our affordable space could offer you and your colleagues.”

The Melting Pot will be ‘beaming live’ from their new location tonight, Monday 8th March, at 17:00 hours through their facebook page
