Crimestoppers Scotland said it is offering up to £5000 for information which leads to a conviction.

Scotland national manager Angela Parker said in a statement: "This incident has, understandably, caused great distress in the local area, which is why we are appealing for people who may not feel comfortable speaking to the police directly to contact Crimestoppers anonymously.

“Everyone who contacts our charity stays 100% anonymous.

“We’ve been supporting people to speak up anonymously since we began in 1988 and have always kept our anonymity guarantee to everyone who trusts us with their crime information.”

Anyone with information can call anonymously on 0800 555 111 or go online at crimestoppers-uk.org.
