

Cruden to hold online public consultation for Leith development on Thursday

A proposal by Edinburgh house builder, Cruden Homes to build 99 apartments on the corner of Salamander Street and Salamander Yards, the site of Edinburgh Carpet and Flooring Warehouse, reaches another stage on Thursday when the developer will hold an online public consultation.

The apartments are different sizes and the development includes four and six storey blocks. Ground floor retail will front Salamander Street.

This online public consultation event, where the development team will be available via a live chat function to answer any questions, will take place on Thursday 28th April between 3.30pm and 7.30pm at www.orbitconsultations.scot/salamanderstreet

Rory Stephens from Cruden Homes said: "We are delighted to be bringing forward these exciting proposals for consultation with the local community. This ambitious scheme regenerates the current brownfield site, delivering much-needed sustainable housing, including affordable homes, as well as providing a retail offering on the ground floor.

“We’re keen to hear community views, allowing us to further shape and refine our proposals for the site, and would urge those able to do so to participate.”
