

Edinburgh Collected records the changing landscape in the city

One of the main purposes of the online archive, Edinburgh Collected, is not only to help build the city's digital collections, but to give everyone the opportunity to add their own images and memories to the site.

People lodge photos of their ancestors, school and childhood photos, others put on images of the ever-changing surroundings of their own neighbourhood.

One of the members of staff has taken some photos of the demolition of the former Royal Bank of Scotland building on Dundas Street.

You can see them all in a new scrapbook on Edinburgh Collected

Demolition of former Royal Bank of Scotland building -2022

This building built in the Brutalist architectural style in 1968, had been unoccupied since 2018 and it is now in the process of demolition as part of a new development. As many of you know, Edinburgh is a constantly changing city and at any given time there are what seems like dozens of building projects going on.

Can you help to update the archive and record the changes in your area on Edinburgh Collected?

Have a look around at any changing shops, buildings and street scenes and help capture these views before they are lost forever.

The former RBS building on Dundas Street photographed during demolition from the George V park August 2022 PHOTO ©2022 The Edinburgh Reporter