Effective measures to manage corporate cards: what you have to do

To entrust your employees with corporate cards, you should monitor all operations and create optimal conditions for use. In this situation, it is necessary to:

- Determine your goals. You can draw up an annual agreement, clearly defining what you can spend the money on and listing recommendations and obligations.
- Analyze corporate spending. Keep track of precisely what the staff spends money on their cards so that if there is any questionable spending, you can stop it right away.
- Set limits. Corporate cards should have an adequate limit to save the firm's budget.
- Set up an alert system. The system can automatically send a message when an employee wants to withdraw too much money or makes specific suspicious actions from the account.
- Request reporting in the form of receipts. Employees should provide tickets to ensure complete control over payments.
- Digitize expenses. A fully automated digital payment system guarantees complete control over spending.

How to implement Wallester Business in your business: a detailed registration description

Registration in the system does not require much time. The following steps are worthwhile:

1. Enter your email address to register.

2. Add more information about your company.

3. Confirm that your account is authentic with your company's corporate documents. You can choose the best filing option.

4. Finish your business information filing with proof of identity:

– Add as much information as possible about the company's CEO or board member (you can have more than one person) and IPOs who own 10-25% or more of the company. If the owners have smaller stakes, include the person with the most significant percentage.

What else you need to know about corporate cards: the most popular questions

What kinds of purchases can I pay for with corporate cards?

These payment cards are suitable for a variety of purposes in the interest of the company – paying for staff travel expenses, paying for goods and services for business, group entertainment for employees, buying necessary tools for work and more.

Does a corporate card work the same way as a personal bank card, or are there differences?

Essentially, corporate cards are VISA cards distributed between employees responsible for purchases. You no longer have to use your personal cards to purchase goods or pay for services for business purposes.

How are corporate cards different from business cards?

There is one big difference between these methods of payment. The bottom line is that when employees pay with a corporate card, they are responsible to the company for each payment. The responsibility goes directly to the primary cardholder for business credit card charges.

Are corporate cards suitable for paying for goods and services abroad?

Corporate cards are an excellent solution for giving business trips to employees. They can be used to pay for transportation, lodging and other additional expenses.
