Pulse of the Place recognised at The Scottish Parliament

The young samba drumming group Pulse of the Place were recognised at The Scottish Parliament after their local MSP, Ben Macpherson, lodged a parliamentary motion of congratulations.

The motion read: "That the Parliament congratulates the 30 young people from the samba drumming band, Pulse of the Place, who performed at the 25th New York City Tartan Day Parade on 15 April 2023; notes that the band has previously performed in the Edinburgh Northern and Leith constituency, across Scotland, and at the Paralympics in 2012; understands that Pulse of the Place raised just under £49,000 to help fund the trip to New York City and, as part of the band's efforts to raise money, it recently drummed across the Forth Road Bridge, and also drummed across the Brooklyn Bridge while in New York City, and commends all involved with Pulse of the Place."

The band runs free classes open to all children and young people. More details here.

Transformational research funding

People's Postcode Lottery have handed over a massive sum of £5 million to two Alzheimer's charities to enable research which will introduce a simple blood test to diagnose the disease. At the People's Postcode Lottery Gala on Monday held in Edinburgh the charities proclaimed this will be the beginning of the end for Alzheimer's.

At the Gala the headline star was actor Forest Whitaker who received £500,000 for his charity the Whitaker Peace & Development Initiative which runs peace building programmes in countries where there is war and conflict. The organisation teaches young people about dispute resolution and how to set up and run businesses. Previously the Oscar winning actor worked as a UNESCO Special Envoy for Peace and Reconciliation. He shared his thoughts with broadcaster Clive Myrie at the event in the EICC on Monday during his first trip to Scotland – despite having starred in the film The Last King of Scotland
