

Somewhere in the West End

The company behind Six by Nico is opening a new restaurant as well as a cocktail bar next month called Somewhere by Nico in Edinburgh's West End.

Chief Executive and founder, Nico Simeone, has confirmed the two new Edinburgh venues in a £2 million investment in the capital. Somewhere with its elegant surroundings will combine the traditional bar experience with storytelling and mixology, and the second Six by Nico restaurant will join its sister restaurant which is on Hanover Street in changing up the menu every six weeks with a new theme.

The new Queensferry Street location with its mystical decor will be an innovative cocktail experience offering a six-stage cocktail experience every six weeks inspired by a "themed world" which will become Somewhere – opened first in Glasgow in January this year and inspired by Six by Nico.

Guests will be invited to become adventurers and mixologists the storytellers, with stories in every drink in a carefully curated two hour cocktail experience for £65pp.

Six Company Chief Executive and founder Nico Simeone said: "Our team is driven daily by the challenge to constantly create and reinvent. We are dedicated to being different, never resting on our laurels, and continuously striving to create the best customer experiences. Our second Six by Nico site in Edinburgh City Centre underlines our commitments to the city and provides our guests with more dining options, as well as the introduction of Somewhere by Nico, our latest brand that reinvents the conventional cocktail experience."

Somewhere by Nico Edinburgh will open in early June 2024 directly beside the new Six by Nico Edinburgh West End on Queensferry Street in the former Foundry 39 building at 39A

Queensferry Rd, Edinburgh EH2 4RA.
