Uncovering the Hidden Costs of Moving Home

If you are moving home soon, hiring a professional moving company like movingday.co is a must-do. However, before you move to the hiring step, let's learn about the hidden moving cost points. So, you can add them all to your final estimation before heading to the execution of the moving plan.

▪ Third-Party Insurance

The top-rated moving companies always offer insurance to compensate you in case your belongings are damaged at their end. However, mostly the insurance amount is nothing compared to the actual cost of your possessions. Hence, you need to get third-party insurance, so you can go through the moving process by being worry-free. Even if it is not third-party insurance, full coverage by a top-notch company comes as a huge hidden cost.

▪ Up-Raise Moving Fee

This hidden cost is usually attributed to the movers who are moving to an apartment or condo. Building management has usually fixed a fee for the individuals who are moving in or out. This fee covers the cost of services the building management is providing like the parking charges for the moving trucks, reservation for an escalator, and so on. Check for the moving fee in your case if applicable.

▪ Home Painting Costs

Typically, when you buy a new home, its paint is nice and crisp by the previous tenants. However, sometimes, this is not the case. Your new home may need new paint or a little renovation before you move it. You can cut down the painting costs by doing it on your own. The home is vacant and painting is an easier task. If you already have a lot on your plate, consider hiring professionals but certainly, it will boost your moving cost.

▪ Handling Fee for Bulky Items

The basic contract you make with your moving handlers only includes the basic items in the typical household. Each moving company charges an extra fee per bulky item if you own any. Therefore, if you are planning to move your piano, bulky furniture, or bathtub, discuss it all with the professionals. Include their moving costs in your final estimate, so you would know costs attributed to the relocation of bulky items.

▪ Cancellation Fees

Moving cancellation is uncommon but nothing is 100% sure. If Destiny has caused you to postpone or cancel your move, you will have to pay the cancellation fee too. The cancellation fee depends on the policies of the company you have hired and the time of cancellation. If there is a considerable time before the actual moving day, many moving companies will pay back the 100% deposit. Check with your company's policies and comprehend their rules and regulations before signing the contract.

▪ Hiring Cleaning Services

Whether it is your old home or new, both need a deep cleaning before you make your move. When the moving date is approaching, you are already handling a lot. But honestly, deep cleaning requirements i.e., chemicals or tools are even more costly than single-time hiring of professionals. Choose wisely.

▪ Rigging Service Charges

The rigging services require specialized equipment and they are very expensive. Such services are required for the bulky items in your belongings. Those items cannot pass through the narrow door frames at your new home and need hoisting to move in. Before signing up for this costly expenditure, consider the other alternatives. For instance, swapping that stuff with something easier to move in your new place. Nevertheless, if that thing matters, you can opt for rigging too.
