

Fringe 2024 – Shaken Not Stirred

Every Fringe goer goes away with a badge of honour for enduring the unforgettable 55 minute experience of “Experimental Immersive meta-Theatre exploring the dilemmas of an identity confused albatross – through mime.”

(There have been worse, very much worse.)

Then again, it's a fair bet you'll have experienced a show that so cuddles your soul with stardust you beam with joy for days after. And just the one's coming right up. There's a hearty giggle fest guaranteed from Parky Players' Shaken Not Stirred.

Their name cheekily riffs on the ensemble's individual and collective challenges living with Parkinson's. The show's title, though a monstrously naff excuse to play havoc with buttock cringing James Bond memes and depreciating cliches galore, it has a more nuanced relevance to their indomitable ethos.

There's every opportunity to immerse in the effervescent espionage antics with pantomime heckles and he's behind you. Brief review- the rest is up to you. Do yourselves a favour – there's so much to savour.
