

Texas to headline Edinburgh's Hogmanay

Organisers UniqueAssembly have announced that Texas will play at Edinburgh's Hogmanay in December this year.

Sharleen Spiteri and her band will perform all their best songs at the Concert in the Gardens on 31 December heralding the New Year.

The group announced the Hogmanay news live on stage during a sold-out show at the Glasgow OVO Hydro on Sunday night.

This will be their third time appearing at Edinburgh's Hogmanay 2024 although the first for about two decades.

Other names on the list include singer-songwriter Callum Beattie and host comedian Susie McCabe.

Spiteri said: "We can't wait to play here for a third time. So get on your glad rags and let's party for the new year."

This New Year around 45,000 revellers are expected to descend on the capital for Edinburgh's Hogmanay Street Party and there will be a firework display from Edinburgh Castle at the Midnight Moment.

City of Edinburgh Council culture and communities convener Cllr Val Walker said: "The capital's Hogmanay celebration is not only an Edinburgh tradition – it's world renowned.

"It will be wonderful to welcome back the iconic Texas performing a career-spanning set.

“With Edinburgh’s own Callum Beattie joining them as a special guest, I’m delighted that this year’s Concert in the Gardens has such a strong Scottish line-up.

“It promises to be a fantastic party to welcome 2025, where gig-goers will have unequalled views of midnight fireworks over Edinburgh Castle.”

Texas have produced 10 studio albums and sold 40 million records worldwide. They are best known for many hits including I Don’t Want A Lover, and Say What You Want.
