

Edinburgh Macmillan Art Show returns for 22nd year

Exhibition will be open to the public from 30 November to 1 December 2024

Macmillan Cancer Support has announced the dates for its Edinburgh Macmillan Art Show 2024. The exhibition will take place at the Cornerstone Centre in the heart of Edinburgh the weekend of 30 November. Featuring affordable artworks from artists based in Scotland, the show is an excellent opportunity for art lovers to contribute to this vital charity. In addition, an online gallery and store will be available during and after the show.

Now in its twenty-second year, the Macmillan Art Show has become a fixture in the Edinburgh cultural calendar. At least fifty percent of the sale from any artwork goes directly to Macmillan Cancer support, with the rest going to the artists themselves. Through this, the show has gained a reputation for helping local artists to gain exposure both at home and abroad.

Macmillan provides nurses and therapists to help patients through treatment. These are the experts on the end of the phone, the advisers telling patients which benefits they are entitled to.

The volunteers help with the everyday things. The campaigners help to improve cancer care. The fundraisers make it all possible.
