

Parents for Future Scotland looking for parents to join them

Parents for Future Scotland is looking for parents to join their Edinburgh 2024 Schools Air Pollution Programme as Parent Talk Facilitators.

Their programme empowers children and their parents to take meaningful action against air pollution in Edinburgh. New members are invited to help deliver an engaging and informative talk to other parents at schools across the city, raising awareness about air pollution and the steps everyone can take to tackle it.

A spokesperson said: “You don’t need any previous experience speaking to groups or expertise in air pollution to get involved! We provide a free day of training to help you get started, and we offer a buddy system to help build your confidence as you grow into this important role.

“All we ask is that you commit to four school talks over the year, after completing the training.

“This is a fantastic opportunity to contribute to positive change in your community, meet other like-minded parents, and develop new skills. Will you join us?
