The Best Places To Freelance And Work Remotely In Edinburgh

Freelancing is becoming more and more popular. First, it was because it was possible, then Covid hit, and then remote work and freelancing became more and more common. Edinburgh has become a bustling hub for freelancers and remote workers. The Scottish capital has a lot to offer, from small coworking spaces to large event venues. Here's a guide to the best places to work remotely in Edinburgh.

Coworking spaces

This is the easiest way to find a place to work remotely. Such places are created specifically for work — many of them provide access to job search services or resources that can help freelancers find new clients or projects. These can be job boards with job listings, seminars, or networking events. Many coworking hubs are designed to support participants in advancing their careers. Although, as a rule, job seekers prefer to conduct their job search on specialized sites. The reason is that there you can find any job from full-time designer to part time autocad drafting remote jobs and do it very quickly.

At the same time, you can find any place to your liking: it can be a high-class room with fast internet and technological events, or cozy rooms with a more relaxed and creative atmosphere. These places are equally comfortable to work remotely for any position, even such as architect remote roles. Working remotely from coworking spaces will also help you communicate with like-minded people. Here are some of the best options:

a. CodeBase

This place is loved because it is located in the heart of Edinburgh. It is considered one of the largest tech incubators in the UK. If you are a freelancer and your job is related to tech (or you have a startup in this field), then this is the best place to work if you want to be surrounded by like-minded people. CodeBase offers:

- High-speed internet
- Meeting rooms
- Access to networking events

b. The Melting Pot

This is a co-working space on Rose Street. If you value community, this is the place to be. It may not be the quietest, but it is a very welcoming environment with a focus on social innovation and collaboration. If you prefer quiet, you may want to look elsewhere. Members get the following benefits:

- Flexible membership (day passes for permanent desks)
- Event spaces for workshops and meetings
- Strong community spirit

Cafes with a great working atmosphere

Not many freelancers are ready to work from a cafe every day because they are also noisy. But in general, for a change of scenery, a few days a week can be spent in such places. Here are some of the best cafes in Edinburgh for remote work:
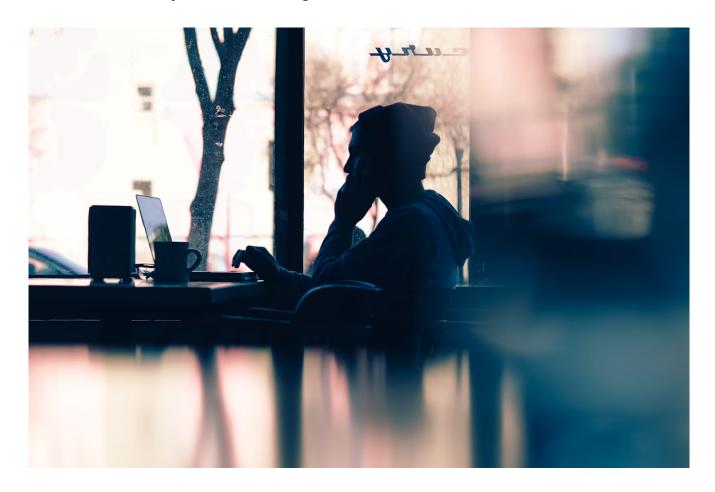

a. The Elephant House

If you are a fan of Harry Potter, then you have probably heard of this place — the famous book series was written here. This is a charming and spacious cafe. For remote workers, the local Wi-Fi will come in handy. There are also many tables here, some of which are quite secluded. From the windows of the cafe, you can look out onto Edinburgh Castle.

b. Loudons

This cafe is located near Fountainbridge. Such a place is suitable for designers and professionals who need more inspiration for creativity. The gimmick of the establishment is its bright design and friendly staff. At the same time, there is a very interesting menu for a snack between work.

Libraries for a quiet work environment

This is the best place for those who value silence while working. In places like libraries, you can concentrate on complex tasks without being disturbed. However, you can't make calls or video conferences here, otherwise you will disturb other visitors. Libraries have free resources and internet access. Edinburgh's libraries are not only functional, they are also beautiful:

a. Central Library

The Central Library on George IV Bridge is an iconic place with a large space and reliable Wi-Fi. There is a reference area here – you need to be extremely quiet here. But there is also a more casual place to work – the Great Hall (short conversations on business are unlikely to disturb anyone here).

b. National Library of Scotland

This is an incredible place for history buffs. Firstly, there are lots of books here that you can use in your work. Secondly, it is a unique place where the spirit of history is in the air. Such a place would be ideal for researchers.

Final say

Edinburgh is the perfect city for remote work. With plenty of social spaces and quiet remote work spots, there's a corner for everyone. Whether you enjoy the buzz of a busy café or the quiet of a library, there's a place for every freelancer in this historic city.
